

Marijana Medugorac, teacher, OŠ Žitnjak, Croatia

Marijana Medugorac is an English and German language teacher at Primary School Žitnjak in Zagreb, Croatia, where she has been teaching since 2004. She graduated in English and German Language and Literature from the University of Osijek and has continuously enhanced her professional competences through training and seminars in the fields of human rights, sustainable development and education.

Throughout her teaching career, Marijana has placed a strong emphasis on the educational and personal development of her pupils, promoting values such as respect, empathy, inclusion and active citizenship. She believes that cultural, social and emotional learning forms the foundation for the development of responsible and engaged members of society.

As a class teacher and organiser of numerous extracurricular and out-of-class learning activities, she actively encourages pupils' participation in cultural, civic and community-oriented initiatives. Her work includes educational visits, activities promoting democratic culture and acceptance of diversity, as well as projects aimed at strengthening students' social and personal competences.

Within the PreMedBullying project, Marijana collaborates closely with Gordana Radonić, President of the Croatian Education Development Institute (HIRO), in the implementation of school-based activities aimed at strengthening pupils' emotional literacy, empathy and social skills, while contributing to a safe and supportive school environment.
